

CREATIVE EDUCATION AS THE MEANS OF CONSCIOUSNESS PRODUCTION

The purpose of education is the formation of new generation's consciousness by previous generations.

The means of consciousness formation are significances.

Depending on the way of significances' origin, two types of education: transmitting and creative are submitted for consideration.

Transmitting education is the way (organized by previous generations) of old type consciousness reproduction by new generations.

The means of old type consciousness reproduction are significances of previous type, created by previous generations and transmitted on new generations.

The ability to reconstruct the significances of previous type is cognitive (re-productive) reflexion.

Creative education is the way (organized by previous generation) of new type consciousness production by new generation.

The means of new type consciousness production are significances of new type, created by new generations.

The ability to produce the significances of new type is creative (productive) reflexion.

Transmitting education is directed to the past. Creative education is directed towards the future.
